

2011 MISS BATTLE OF PLEASANT HILL PAGEANT

Saturday, March 26, 2011      6:00 p.m.      Pleasant Hill High School
Deadline: Monday – March 21, 2011

The Battle of Pleasant Hill Pageant committee is proud to announce the 29th Annual Battle of Pleasant Hill Pageant. The pageant will be held in the Pleasant Hill High School Gymnasium on March 26, 2011 at 6:00 p.m. All divisions will compete in authentic costumes. In addition, the Teen Miss and Miss categories will compete in evening gown and the Miss Contestants will compete in interview. Also there will be an on stage question for Miss Contestants. These questions will not be known to anyone other than the judges. An interview with the judges will be held for the Miss Contestants at 3:00 p.m. on pageant day in the high school cafeteria. Immediately following the interview, there will be a meal provided to all Teen Miss and Miss Contestants, as well as the judges and visiting queens. All Teen Miss Contestants must attend the interview as well, although they will not be interviewed, but they are to come in costume for judging and authenticity. Contestants will wear their costumes for the interview. The Teen Miss and Miss Contestants will also perform a mandatory dance routine that will not be judged. Contestants will be responsible for acquiring their own dance outfits, which will be blue jeans, red or blue shirt and white keds. The Miss category is opened to residents of Sabine, DeSoto, Red River and Natchitoches Parishes only. All other categories are open. All contestants must sign a queen contract. The age groups are as follows:

Battle of Pleasant Hill Crown and Cape Agreement

Once receiving the crown and cape to proudly represent the Battle of Pleasant Hill Festival it is your duty to accept the responsibilities for the care of our custom crown and cape. Listed are rules in order to help you better care for these important pieces.

1. NEVER are you to spray your hair with the crown on your head.
2. Bobbie pins may be used to hold the crown in place on top of the plastic tubing. Please try to avoid putting them on the rhinestones themselves. Try to place them in between instead.
3. Any damage done to the crown or cape while in the care of the queen will be an expense paid for by the queen.
4. Anytime the crown is not being used you are to store it in its carrying case.
5. You are to bring the crown and cape in for inspection when called on by the Pageant Committee.

I have read the rules as set forth in the Battle of Pleasant Hill Festival Crown and Cape agreement. I understand each rule and agree to abide by them. I will return the crown and cape in good condition to the Battle of Pleasant Hill Pageant Committee.

1860 CLOTHING GUIDELINES

No zippers, Velcro or plastic buttons. Clothing fastened with glass, wood, bone, horn, metal or stone buttons or metal hooks. More formal clothing laced up the back with silk ribbon. Elastic was available, but mostly for use in shoes.

No man-made fibers. Clothing was made of cotton, wool, silk and linen.

Dresses were primarily one-piece with a sewn in waistband and they were made of the same fabric and worn with a belt. There are no documents showing women wore white blouses and colored skirts. Ball gowns were the exception.

A separate dye process was required for each color in a fabric, which made a fabric with multiple colors too expensive for the average woman. Large patterned fabrics were also very expensive.

Popular colors were those that could be achieved using roots, plants, barks, nuts, flowers and grasses to make the dye. Blue, yellow, pumpkin, chartreuse green, browns, ivory, gray, pink, and red were popular colors. Red was affordable only to the wealthy because the dye was made from crushed cochineal insects.

Necklines were round, jewel necklines and fit close to the base of the neck. Girls under the age of 12 years old wore dresses with a chemise neckline, slightly off the shoulders and fitted for everyday wear.

Hoops were not worn with work dresses and rarely around the home. Several stiff petticoats were layered to get the fullness the 1860s fashions required. As many as 25 petticoats were worn at one time.

Young girls under the age of 12 were allowed to wear short-sleeved clothing. After puberty, no skin was allowed to show, except the neck and the hands.

Long hair was the norm in the 1860s. Occasionally a woman would have short hair because it was cut to get rid of lice or because of fever. Girls wore their hair in braids, never loose. Older girls wore the hair low on the nape of their neck. Older women tended to wear their hair in a bun off of the neck, but still positioned low in the back.

Bonnets and hats were worn anytime a woman or girl was outside the home. They were not made of pressed felt. At three years old a girl began wearing a hard bonnet for dressy occasions.

Boots with square toes or faint round toes were worn outside the home. Low-heeled slippers, such as ballet flats were worn inside the home.

All clothing was lined with brown polished cotton fabric to increase the life of the garment and to keep it clean. Every woman wore a corset. Even children wore them. The line of the clothing worn in the 1860s cannot be achieved without wearing a corset or proper underpinnings.

A woman's wardrobe consisted of boots, stockings up to the thigh (held in place by garters), a white chemise (below the knee in length), and drawers, which were mid-calf length and were crotchless. The corset went on over the chemise and a corset cover went on over the corset. A modesty petticoat went on next. However many petticoats you intended to wear over the hoop, you wore UNDER the hoop as well. Example: Five petticoats over the hoop required a modesty petticoat and five under petticoats to be worn under the hoop.

Popular dress trims were mostly handmade, knitted, crocheted, delicate handmade laces. Fabric piping was also popular to alleviate stress on the seams of garments. Again, they were made of the dress fabric, not a contrasting fabric.

Dress lengths for younger girls were what we refer to as ballet length. Fabric was expensive and difficult to buy, so the shorter dresses required less fabric and the girls didn't trip on the hems.

Teenaged girls and women wore dresses over a hoop that was no more than 4" off of the floor. The hemline of work dresses could brush the top of their boot to as high as the ankle, providing boots were worn. The hems on dresses generally did not have lace on them so the lace didn't catch on anything. Instead, on the inside there was a wide band of fabric known as a hem protector. It protected the hem from tears and daily wear as well as dirt. A wide wool braid was also popular. Both methods gave weight to an unlined skirt.

Snoods were not worn over loose hair. The hair was fixed and then a delicate invisible silk net was put on to contain the hair. The exceptions were when a woman was doing heavy house cleaning or if she was wearing a hat rather than a bonnet. A snood worn in the 1860s would be the equivalent to a woman today wearing a bandanna over her hair during dirty jobs.

Dresses fastening in the back were for the wealthy who had assistance dressing themselves. Most clothing fastened down the front. Younger girls wore clothing that could be pulled over their heads.

Popular accessories for the little girls were baskets, dolls, and books. For young ladies, baskets, reticules (a tiny purse) parasols or fans were carried.

Lastly, the patterns you buy in local stores are COSTUMES patterns. They have no historical accuracy. Patterns made from original garments are available and are accurate for this time period.
